Viscount Castlerosse on the Aborgole Railway Accident. the Morning Post publishes a letter from ord Castlerosse, one of the survivors of the bergele accident, relating to one copied from e Birmingham Post, and containing state. ents which his lordship considers calculated to tuse the greatest pain to the relatives and riends of those who perished. The writer of he letter complained of stated that he was on he spot in about 10 minutes, and added, "From hat I saw and heard I am thoroughly convinc-I that everyone might have escaped if the doors had not been locked." His lordship aya: - "I was one of the first to jump out; adeed. I did so before the shock of the collision as over, yet in that moment of time the three ret passenger carriages were wrapped in a ame of fire, which, in fact, swept through hem, and rendered any approach to them mpossible. No human power could possibly ave saved any of the unfortunate sufferers. do think, therefore, in the face of uch an av ful calamity, individuals should reliciously abstain from writing sensational letters. ally calculated to harrow the feelings of those zho are now, alas! monraing the loss, under nell awful gircumstances, of relatives and riends. The writer who was on the ground ten niontes after the accident might just as well, for any knowledge he could have of the possibility of the escape of any passangers who perished, have come ten days later. But what chiefly induces me to trouble you is the following our agraph, in the same letter :- Lord Castlevosse's governess, as she was coming up the hunk, heard a lady eay, ' For God's sake, let us mt before the fire came to her. What happened was this-My children's governess heard r gentleman ask the grand for a key to open. the door of one of the London carriages, which were never touched by the flamen. I do not say this with the view of relieving the company from any responsibility they may have incurred, as I have sufficient ground for knowing that some of the London carriages were locked on. both sides."

The Queen's Return. The Times hopes the Queen may return to Switzerland another year. Her subjects will amuse themselves for some time in speculating whether Scotland holds her own against Switzerland, whether outline and colour tell against hulk, or whether eternal snow has the same fageination for soverrigns as for citizens. It is almost everybody's experience that the great apper land of Europe, midway between nations and the sky, and the very paradise whence spring north, south, and east the three great rivers of the continent, is a new creation and brings a new nature, if it may be said, to every mind at all open to new impressions. It is a return to youth; a new start in life and feeling, a softening of the past, a brightening of the future, and the opening of fresh springs of feeling and of thought. It is well that the Queen's circle should be widened, and that she should see more than is visible in a periodical oscillation between Oshorne and Bale moral. Anything to interrupt an inveterathabit and break the spell of sorrowful and saddening recollections. Having thrown herself, with a laudable effort, into the great European stream of fourists, even for a few days, the Queen will feel herself once more in the living. moving world. There, in the presence of a more than buman majesty, and in a court high-er than that of any earthly realm, she has seen t gathering of all nations assembled to offer. at least the secret service of their souls. It is in occasion and a spectacle to open the heart long locked in private contemplation, to revive the sympathies, and to reduce to its due proportion everything that is exaggerated and engrossing. The Queen has felt that touch of Alpine nature which makes us all kin. The beauties of Switzerland are househuld words in this country, and at every fireside where they are known and remembered the Royal tourist will now be, in thought, a fellow-traveller and selfinvited guest.

The Daily News does not forget that there is an official side to this entisfaction of the people at the Queen's successful journey. Although the great mass of the British people are abundantly content that the Queen should discharge her of-ficial duties in as much quiet and privacy as she denses, there are considerations which render t desirable that also should be sufficiently refreshed to resume the splendours as well as the carea of State. The brilliancy of the London season depends on the Court, and the Court is only gradually emerged from the long eclipse which has darkened the middle portion of the Oteen's reign. Joining in the people's welcome to the r returning Queen, the Daily News is bound to say that the people, as a whole are quite content to leave the Queen berself to decide as to the way in which her duties shall be done. They will be glad to see her in her former place, as the active head of the ourest Court which this country has ever known, but they will not sanction any intrusion on the more private discharge of her political duties should that privacy be her choice. I be English people does not depend on show and pageant, but on a deep persuasion that the good order of the tate is protected by the Throne. Curty Harr. — Iss emincipation made the negro and his wife ashamed of their curly hair? One is led to infer so from the fact that two independent adventurers recently lodged apecitications in the United States Patent Office for heir straightening fluids. Their sole object appears to have been to secure the authority and recommendation for sale which the stamp of the patent commissioners would carry with THE P. & O. S. N. Co.'s steamship it, for both the compounds were useless nos-trums; one was a decection of Iceland moss, and the other dilute nitric a id. The road from Carcinetta to Burblo was covered over an extent of 400 metres with Captain Hinstin, will be dispatched for old trees from the fields. At that spot stood a dwelling house, the roof of which was carried off and the walls of the upper storey knocked down. A carriage in the court-yard was carried outside, but smushed to pieces.

This phenomenon, observed by many persons, was in the form of an immense cone, of a dark grey colour, with a luminous base. From its upper part issued a smoke similar to that of in width, and moved at about three metres from the ground, making a sharp noise. It twisted about in various directions and advanced Extracts.

Old Lundon and the Life There,

(From the " Neice of the World.")

So soon after the Conquest as 1276 the Saxon

Christian names had disappeared from among the citizens. One of the reasons assigned by Mr. Riley, in his "Memorials of London," is worth noticing. He points out that from a very early period the population of the City was
